WITH ; Focusing adverbs can "point to" any part of the sentence, but they most commonly point to (focus on) the verb phrase. They may occur next to (before) the phrase they refer to, or they may occur in a clause after. (See Sentence Position.) We can state the sentence without a focusing adverb, but its attention-getting effect will be lost!

Learning to ask wh- questions requires two things of students: they must learn the correct words to use, and they must learn the word order for two different types of wh- questions. As students learn to apply these features of wh- questions, they get parts right and parts not-quite-right and parts wrong as natural stages along the way to fluent and accurate question asking.
