Eutrophication (from Greek eutrophos, "well-nourished"), or hypertrophication, is when a body of water becomes overly enriched with minerals and nutrients which induce excessive growth of plants and algae. This process may result in oxygen depletion of the water body. One example is an "algal bloom" or great increase of phytoplankton in a water body as a response to increased levels of nutrients.

1. Introduction. Planned resettlement has been a common spatial strategy employed by governments and international agencies to achieve a diverse set of development and environmental objectives (Lyll, 2017, Morris-Jung and Roth, 2010). Most of these resettlement programs have been involuntary or forced (World Bank, 2004). Evidence collected from a diverse set of countries shows that involuntary ...

It's a bit easier now that we have the Internet, but ARCAT archivists didn't always have that luxury. When the older material in the archives was described, the archivists would have had to rely on people in the building or in the wider Catholic community who spoke languages other than English to provide translations.
